

This book is a resource for those with no understanding about trafficking for sexual exploitation as well as those who have a great deal of knowledge and experience in countering this modern day enslavement. Drawing together a wide range of voices, from the poet, to the survivor, from the theologian to the police practitioner, Not for Sale gives voice to many who have so far remained voiceless, and brings the outrage of rape, intimidation and the abuse of power right into your living space.

In an age where buying sex has become easier in some parts of London than ordering a pizza, Not for Sale is an essential part of the tool kit for responding to a culture in which sex has become commoditized and devalued. Over 700,000 women and children internationally are bought and sold, like cattle, and an estimated 4,000 women trafficked into the UK every year. Exploring the themes of relationships, deception, despair, hope, justice and recovery, this is a book to engage your emotions and develop an informed response to this modern day slavery. There are no easy answers, but hard questions are raised about the sort of society we live in, and the relational world we want to make at a personal and an international level. Love is not for Sale, and this book will help you understand why.

A powerful book which no one can read without being convinced on the one hand of the evil of trafficking and on the other by the power of the gospel to bring freedom.

Nola Leach, Chief Executive, CARE

This is a really important book, which should influence debate and get the voluntary sector- and the statutory agencies- really sitting up and taking notice. I hope it gets the attention it deserves.

Rabbi Julia Neuberger

This book marks the critical moment we have reached in the history of human rights. It is compelling in its message and is to be commended as essential reading for faith communities and for the wider public. Diverse contributions from experts and leaders are united in their call to the UK government judiciary and corporate finance world, for zero tolerance for trafficking for sexual exploitation. The success of this appeal relies upon significant time, financial resources, legislation and cultural will. Society owes nothing less than this to the women, past present and future whose dignity and rights have been sold in the interests of economic profit and sexual power.

I commend this book and trust that those who read will also be moved to act.

Myra Blyth, Chaplain and fellow in Pastoral Studies, Regents Park College, Oxford University.

With vivid concreteness, this book confronts us with the horrors of sexual slavery. It should be required Lenten reading for all Christians.

Works meet for repentance would include supporting CHASTE.
